

New Bugtracker and added site security.

Written by Corey DeLasaux

Wednesday, 01 October 2008 20:44 - Last Updated Thursday, 09 October 2008 11:59

We added a bug tracker to aid in well tracking bugs of coarse. This will allow our users to see what we have been notified about, add their observations and help us hopefully to squash bugs. You should see the login for the site appear in the next few days or so as we prep the site for its use and determine how we want everyone to access it. Just make sure you truly found a bug, and have completely gone through the ZoneMinder Documentation, FAQ, and the troubleshooting links at the top of the forum topics and are posting a truly unique problem.

In addition I have also implemented a Black List system to protect the site from any Harvesting BOTS. This site participates with Project Honey Pot to aid in being a pain in the rear to these malicious activities and to add to the current securities implemented to help protect you from having yours or my email from falling prey to them. I have had trip lines for a while but this is the first time I have engaged the Black List. If you have a web site, I strongly urge you to join Project Honey Pot and get involved and you can find plenty of information on their site on how to participate. You can also participate in around about way by just having links to this site so any harvesters, crackers, etc. if they haven't been Black Listed will get trapped and added to Project Honey Pot's Black List. Mind you nothing is a 100% effective but at least we can try.

Best regards,

Corey